

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 5/14/2024 10:56:36 PM

First name: Hannah

Last name: Lennon

Organization:

Title:

Comments: I'm not opposed to replacing an old, out-dated lift such as C-Chair. However, there's nothing wrong with the Quicksilver and to spend the dollars on a gondola that doesn't go anywhere much different than the Quicksilver is absurd. It seems like a waste of money. I have similar thoughts on the Freedom. It only takes you a few yards above the Indy. If you're going to spend capital funds, spend them on replacing old, outdated lifts or new lifts that take you somewhere different than existing, fully-functional lifts. I get that it's to spread people out so lift lines aren't as long but at least put in lifts or gondolas that take you somewhere. This would never happen because of the number of beginners that wouldn't read signs but if you're going to put in a gondola over there at least have it go to the top of Peak 10. Again, having the top terminal be just slightly higher than the Quicksilver makes no sense.