Comments: I moved to Kentucky to get away from the cutting industry. I lived in the Panhandle of Florida when there was woods. Now there's no agriculture and no culture at all. Kentucky I seen these forest mean everything to these people. From hikers, hunters people who fish the secret ponds. I've listened to people who grew up in these woods., camping or shot their first deer. No one is benefitting from these woods being cut. We don't need more houses neighborhoods we do not need more shops and buildings. We need forest, trees produce oxygen , produces animals it keeps everything breathing. We can't inhale dust 24/7. I have yet see any loggers replace what they took and try to justify the striping. The wild life will suffer the people who live here will suffer. We aren't tree huggers we just have logical common sense and aware of the negative affects this would have.
