

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 5/22/2024 4:00:00 AM

First name: Rachel

Last name: Hayes-Ueltschi

Organization:

Title:

Comments: Of the best available climate science, it has been demonstrated the importance of mature and old-growth forests for climate change mitigation. These forests act as essential carbon sinks, helping to absorb and store significant amounts of carbon dioxide from the atmosphere. By acknowledging this science, the USFS should align its plans with broader conservation objectives, including endangered species within this area and their role in ecosystem preservation, to contribute meaningfully to climate action efforts.