When are the cutting and destruction of our beautiful landscape going to stop? There's already thousands of acres and multiple locations where lands were clear cut or mined for coal and left to grow up in a thicket. It never returns to its original state, and could take hundreds of years for mature trees to grow and replace what is already there. What happened to protecting our resources and just enjoying its natural beauty? At the end of the day this is only going to line someone's pocket by selling logs, and moving on to something else leaving the land looking like a desolate wasteland. I strongly oppose cutting ANY of the timber in these locations, the next generation won't know what woods look like if it continues at this rate. It's time to worry about something more important, this timber has never bothered anyone before, why worry about clear cutting it now?
