Comments: I was a resident of Kentucky for 25 years and spent many years enjoying Jellico and the forests near the border. I absolutely do not support this project whatsoever, I understand selective cutting when a forest reaches over 70% population or in the case of serious disease, but to hear that you are trying to clear cut anything just sounds dangerous. Especially for the overgrowth of invasive species as well as the destruction of ancient mycelium structures underground which are crucial for soil health and now that we know how far and wide mycelium structures grow, this is going to have extremely far reaching effects on the health of forests across multiple states. Please do not move forward with this project!
