Comments: I was a resident of Williamsburg, Kentucky for two beautiful years. Having lived in both the Pacific Northwest and in the Southwest, I can attest to the uniqueness of the Jellico forested and mountainous region. It is like no other geographical location or geological location. The variety of wildlife (including the bats!) merits an equally diverse landscape and habitat. Safety with respect to landslides and potential flooding is essential in a location already plagued by many hazards related to natural and manmade disasters. To sustain and support this unique region and its human and animal residents is incumbent upon us all.
