Comments: I support alternative B of the options listed. Alternative B would decommission the most amount of the most amount of unnecessary roads and motorized trails in the Stibnite area. It would also remove campsites too close to the water or harden them so that there was less erosion. Of course it does not far enough in this regard as it would be great if the Quartz Creek road and trail system was closed at the lower portion of the Quartz Creek drainage near Yellowpine as I remember when it was and was full of elk and now it is not worth going to for hunting.

The no-action alternative would leave the wildcatted scars in place and the erosion would continue into the water on campsites too close to the river. All of the other alternatives would continue this degradation at various levels.

Alternative B is best.
