Comments: Just put a firebreak around Mammoth Lakes, and let the surrounding forest burn. In fact, do that for all communities. Let the fires burn naturally, to restore wildfire equilibrium in the changing climate, which will restore the forest's health and minimize the number and severity of wildfires in the future. As with most natural processes, It's impossible to control the effects of climate change. Just let nature do it's thing. It knows best how to take care of the forest. Keep the firefighters employed by suppressing ember ignitions within the communities effected.
