Comments: Born in Wyoming and frequent visitor to the Rocky Mountain State I was disappointed when I found out about this project coincidentally after attending a horsebacking venture through A.J. Brick Outfitters.

I live in California, and I can enjoy a break from the metropolitan hustle and bustle of the city, that's why I intentionally look for secluded, quiet, and adventurous activities in Wyoming and Colorado. I think it's why these states are sought-after and so protected; the ever growing thrill of absolute protection from the outside world. I think transforming this area for large campgrounds would ruin this idyllic image of the scenery, and if it's necessary, then please consider smaller investments.

Much much much smaller. We don't need buildings up in these mountains, simply go more primitive. That's the appeal of going out into nature, to be enraptured by it! Please, let's not forget why Colorado is popular to begin with.
