Comments: I have spent my whole life in the mountains of Colorado. I am a hunter, hiker, caver, fisherman and backpacker. As an owner of multiple firearms, I have 2 major concerns: the first is safety and the second is environmental destruction. I have twice had bullets zip past me and my family from shooters lacking any sense of firearm safety. Then there is the condition of the forests. I am truly disgusted by the abuse which fellow firearms enthusiasts treat the natural landscape. Entire forests shot literally to the ground, piles of trash, mountains of brass, hillsides and streams full of lead, wrecked landscapes. I have a right to my firearms, but none of us have a right to destroy our forests or put others at risk. I believe option 2 is the correct course of action. Limit the shooting sites, and ticket the folks who break the rules. We are sharing these forests with other people and the environment. Our actions impact a web of community, and its time we become responsible, even if it means regulation.
