Comments: If one considers the population and housing expansion that is taking place in Michigan, any decisions regarding the protection of old growth trees should be done by a committee of environmentalists knowledgeable about the impact to forests and all life above and below earth. My forest was logged under the supervision of a forestry manager who owned a Christmas tree farm. Red flag. The only interest was how much were the trees worth.

Not enough apparently! Trees are being removed for housing at an alarming rate with no thought as to their benefits. Landowners should be encouraged to save forests before, like the buffalo, they're all destroyed for no good reason.
