Comments: I am the daughter of a forester. At age 8 or so, I was punished for carving a boy's initials into a favorite tree, decades later, the tree survives but the wounds are deep. Long into adulthood, I continued to "visit" individual trees in my childhood home in Minnesota. I consider trees my friends and the unnecessary felling of most trees, murder. For this reason, I lodge my objection to the U.S. allowing logging in old-growth forests. Old trees are simply irreplaceable.
