Comments: I am baffled as to how long it takes such important incredibly high priority and immediate decisions to be made. It's ridiculous and the people making these decisions should be ashamed of themselves. Although they might not have caused the problem, but because of their inability to make a immediate plan, plus all the red tape that's required, they're making the catastrophe at least 10 times worse. Please start using some common sense and stop listening to all these environmental groups, who by the way most likely don't live anywhere near the forest and are unable to comprehend the importance of forest management. We are the silent majority. So please cut the red tape, come up with an effective plan of attack for these different situations and implement them before the disaster occurs.
