Comments: Dear Forest service,

The world has many wondrous natural things, so much of our history is vanishing with what we call human progress. The trees stand still and watch it, or they watch their friends fall. Aside from shade, oxygen, shelter for wildlife, habitat, and hunting grounds, trees protect our land from erosion and our souls from dying. There is no sound like the wrestling of leaves in the breeze, nor greater comfort on a hot day than to sink into the forest and hide under a canopy of green. These tall trees remind us of our duty and our short lives. We have taken too much. Please, protect every remaining tree. Our children and grandchildren and their grandchildren should receive the same honor of stewardship and comfort that only trees can provide, but only if we let them.
