Comments: The Emerald Lake Shelter Reconstruction Project as currently proposed would degrade the wilderness character of the Mount Timpanogos Wilderness in Utah. The damaged shelter is unnecessary and is not compatible with the area's wilderness designation. The proposed reconstruction would be done using helicopters and other motorized equipment which would further degrade the wilderness. If some genuine need for reconstruction of the shelter should arise, the work should be done with minimal disruption to the wilderness, perhaps using methods similar to the original hut construction and packing materials in without any motorized equipment. The best approach is to let the existing hut continue to deteriorate without any attempt to reconstruct it. This wilderness area has been set aside deliberately with the intention of leaving it alone without any human intervention. Please leave it alone and do not proceed with this misguided restoration project.
