Comments: I am not an expert on this subject however, logging within an old growth forest doesn't seem very beneficial. Cutting down these old trees which have been around for centuries would not only harm wildlife by stripping them of their homes which could cause them to wander to urbanized areas which could get them killed, they would also be making the world hotter, (trees give out water vapor and cool down the surrounding environment, basic science) Not to mention the fact we would be losing out on valuable research data such as learning about certain species and their habits and finally, communities which rely on the natural products created by these forests may be affected
