Comments: No the old growth forests are percentages of what they were previously before logging and replacing them with fields of pine trees which are only planned to be cut down a few years later, is not "reforestation" the eco system is removed with commercial logging and does not come back with a momoculture plantation.

These are forests showing how our land used to be and we the people demand it be kept that way. If paper and building companies need material so bad why don't they just plant hemp or use alternative building methods. Us common folks are being told to limit our driving or make sure to recycle while logging companies literally kill forests for profit. Maybe they need to reevaluate their business model.
