

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 9/10/2024 4:00:00 AM

First name: Jack

Last name: Hawthorne

Organization:

Title:

Comments: I beg of you to refrain from any more old-growth logging. Forests that have survived for so long are critical for ecosystem health, fire protection, and the legacy of our community. Lumber corporations care not for the integrity of old growth and similarly aged trees, only blind profit. They would sooner raze the earth of trees if it meant their pockets were lined-- but as a lifelong resident of ecosystems ruined by development, we cannot let them continue.

The great American Chestnut tree was once the backbone of domestic woodworking. Now, finding one is a rare treasure indeed. Will we let old growth forests go the same way? Will we let the become wood pulp and plank boards instead of homes for animals, carbon traps, oxygen producers? Spare our old trees. Protect the ones we have so that they may become old growth.