Comments: No, you shouldn't cut down old trees. Old trees are LITERALLY the backbone of those forests and they contribute a lot to keeping the forests alive. Even if you plant newer trees in their place, it won't help because those trees will have been planted too closely together in lifespan. Therefore they'll all grow at the same rate and won't be able to sustain life well. In fact, they'll just compete against each other for resources. Can we please just STOP DESTROYING NATURE? There's literally no point for it and we're just seeing ourselves up for failure. I don't care if you're done old idiot that won't be there for "the future". Generations after us deserve to have a good life on a beautiful planet and even then, the planet itself deserves to be beautiful and all we know how to do is destroy it.
