Comments: Hello, I'm writing as a concerned citizen who values nature, but does not have the time, legal training, or profit incentive to pour over legal documents or land surveys. What I do know from living in, and visiting various parts of the country is that sprawl is a problem that exists even in isolated areas.

While the federal government sometimes allows wild lands to be used for private profits it is my understanding from the Wilderness Coalition that local politicians are trying to use these lands. This would mean that a federal purchase is a more protective measure.
