Comments: I am astonished that anyone, let alone any group, any state, any country, any race would consider logging an old growth forest. Sure, it's maybe the best wood, but it will have a lot of flaws in it. They accumulate over the years. Just like old people have a lot of things wrong with them.

Killing old people and logging old trees are not very different. Neither can easily fight back. And maybe you want their spot for your own purposes.

Well, get over it. I value old trees and old people highly. They have wisdom, endurance, and gentleness. Maybe we should think about the gentleness a little more. Maybe we should mimic the gentleness a little more.

Don't you have better things to do to enlarge your fortune? Or polish your résumé?
