Comments: I will never forget the majesty of the first time that I visited an old-growth forest in Olympic National Park, and I strongly urge USFS to prioritize the protection of ALL old growth and mature forests in the United States. Sustained yield and multiple uses of public lands are both possible without allowing the wanton destruction of the few remaining primeval forests in the US. This rule will protect living organisms that have been alive longer than the United States, and we must ensure that they are not destroyed for nothing more than shortsighted profit.
