

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 9/19/2024 4:00:00 AM

First name: Dave

Last name: Seger

Organization:

Title:

Comments: Life cycle forest management that includes aggressive early stage growth created by clear cutting is important to all wildlife but particularly to song birds, grouse, woodcock, deer, moose and all other species of the forest. Clear cuts could also serve as fire breaks for forest fire that happen to dominate the news lately. Early stage forest growth will also support climate change goals with varied species of trees that require regeneration that is best achieved by clear cutting.