Comments: The old growth trees off Oregon are the reason I love to travel to the coastal regions and wander in their beauty. The cleared hills where once stood giants are like graveyard. I cry over their stumps wishing that we could harvest forests without leaving a barren landscape and sparing the old trees. Where I lived in Minnesota before moving to Oregon 11 years ago, never did you see a clear cut hill. I still am shocked by the practice. My father was a timber buyer and forester so I'm not against the practice, but I do believe we can do it more responsibly and leave the beauty of Oregon which so many appreciate and love. Please consider leaving the big old growth for future generations to be in awe of.

Thank you for your consideration
