Comments: From my personal experience, trees are an important part of our American heritage. The life of the trees were here before we were. In the Republic of Georgia, the now ancient Yew trees were protected by King Tamar. This action made it possible for us to visit them today. The preservation of old growth forest is likened to the passing down of an heirloom that becomes more valuable overtime. Let's be active in leaving a living heritage of old growth forest for generations of Americans to come.
