Comments: It is good to see that some tree planting will be taking place as part of this recovery effort. In the past the SFNF has not done any tree planting in burn scars of the last 25 years. Therefore, the burn scars of the Dalton and Tres Lagunas fires are transitioning to scrub oak patches and not the multicultural forests they once were.

Is there any consideration for looking at those previous burn scar areas and doing some coniferous tree planting?
Will tree planting be considered more seriously in future fire recovery efforts?
