Comments: Please remember and respect the Wilderness Act of 1964 that intended and maintains and mandates that Wilderness is to be preserved in its natural conditions, affected primarily by the forces of nature with the imprint of man's work substantially unnoticeable, in order to preserve its wilderness character.

Wilderness areas are not to be "managed," even with the best of intentions. Nature is to be left to take its course.

Controlled burning can be sound forest management, but Wilderness is not unrestricted National Forest and must be excluded from usual procedures appropriate in other areas.

Protect all Wilderness areas in Sequoia and Sierra National Forests from interfering human intervention.
Preserve them as Wilderness as intended and designated by law of Congress.
