Comments: I totally support this project and can't wait to run some new trails in Vermont. As an avid trail runner I see a lot of trail maintenance and development projects across the state. The one thing I have noticed is that how foreign some trails end up looking after being constructed. I am a firm believer in "Leave No Trace" and value the pure essence the Green Mountains has to offer. I would like to suggest keeping the trails as primitive as possible and well marked with blazes vs signage (other than at intersections). If you want to see a trail that was over thought by a bunch of knuckleheads and their decisions, go visit the Burrows trail at Camels Hump. This trail looks so unnatural and goofy lined with woody debris to "keep people on the trail" and long sections of rock stairs.
