Comments: It truly is time to rewrite the NW Forest Plan. After decades of reduced logging and thinning, it is apparent that is not the most tractable way of creating a healthy forest. Adding in the fact this has created over grown forests that have become very susceptible to fire and disease. I do not advocate for clear cutting, but more logging that can target areas and is select. Creating and leaving logging roads that can aid in fire management . If you consider what was spent this year alone for fire suppression. Being more aggressive in the logging/thinning process could reduce these cost. By having more timber sales will create more funds to help with the management and projects that help with a healthy eco system . Much has changed in the last 30 years, so now is the time to change as well. Matt Hurley
