Comments: I thank the USDA/USFS for allowing space for public comments regarding this project and am writing today in opposition to it. As we suffer escalating losses of biodiversity, it is imperative that we protect our every remaining species; however, without similar protections for their habitat, we are bound to accelerate an extinction crisis despite our best intentions. I question the logistics of achieving the project's seemingly contradictory benefits of 'improved wildlife habitat/restored soils and wetlands' and logging/road creation/commercial production. That this project jeopardizes such vital old-growths is simply too risky at this point, but worse still is that it could set a dangerous precedent for others as well. I feel compelled to object, even as a Wisconsin resident, precisely because this issue touches us all. With all due respect, I urge the USDA/USFS to reconsider this project.
