Comments: Montlure camp has a long history of providing a safe place for youth to spend a week with fellow Christians. The bonds formed at the camp last a lifetime for many. I myself went to a family camp as a young child and then transitioned to being a youth camper. Eventually, I was a camp counselor for three years. I have close life-long friends I met at this camp over 40 years later. My siblings attended this camp as well as my daughter with similar positive experiences.

This place holds a special place for me as I wouldn't exist without it. My parents met at the camp in the late 60s.

The dedication of many to keep these experiences alive is inspiring. Many have worked hard to restore the camp after the devastation of the wildfires. Their work is a testament to their dedication to keep the camp alive for others to have the same positive experiences thousands of campers have had over the years.
