Comments: I am a homeschooling mother of four. They have been raised to cherish the outdoors and to see the extreme value in our forests and diverse wildlife habitats that surround us. It is devastating to learn of the potential future of our beautiful state. We deeply value the wonderland that is Oregon. It is unlike any other state because of its incredibly diverse landscapes and explorable outdoor playgrounds in the forests. Among many other things that nature provides it personally has been a one of a kind classroom for children to see our living world close up in person and to learn to love and respect it at a very young age in hopes that will carry to the next generation. We need our forests we treasure our land. To our U.S. government: Please take the time to learn and to respect our forests as much as our children do. If they can understand the importance of saving our forests I'm sure you can too.
