Comments: I am a fisherman and I value clean water. I also value wildlife, which is dependent on old growth trees remaining, for the most part, uncut. These magnificent trees foster beneficial carbon-retaining effects to help mitigate climate change. They also provide economic benefits in the form of recreation and tourist dollars, far surpassing the economic benefit to the loggers, who are being replaced by technology. Choose a plan that cuts as few trees as possible. And decouple the interests of Native Americans from intensive logging. They have always deserved a place at the table.
