Comments: As a citizen of the United States, two of the things that make our country great are our beautiful landscapes and our commitment to protecting them. Our old growth forests are vital to the ecosystem and rich history of the country. They are a draw for those living in the United States and tourists from abroad coming to see the lush forests found in the United States. These beautiful forests are not replicable as they have been growing for HUNDREDS of years. We need these beautiful forests to share with future generations the beauty and importance of nature. These trees produce oxygen and cleanse our air of pollutants. Our forests are crucial for the maintenance of our history and our survival on this planet.
