Comments: Hello,

As a biologist and a true fan of spending time outdoors, I know the critical function our national forests, especially old growth forests serve. Over the last 50 years we have learned so much about the services forests provide; their ecosystem functions, the protection of human health and safety, and the critical function they serve for a number of threatened and endangered species. Not to mention, they're available for Americans to get outside, exercise, and connect with the land. The proposal to increase timber production in our national forests is a mistake and an attack on the American people. Taking these resources from Americans and giving the financial incentive to a few is shameful. Please stand up for these places, the species that rely on them, and the people who love them.

Thank you for your time,

Anna Vallery
