Comments: Any and all forests, but especially old growth forests need to be protected at all costs. The capital gains from logging these areas are not worth the consequences that it will bring. Where does the logging end? If we continue to take and take and take eventually there will be nothing left, humans have already done enough damage, lets not open up a new path of destruction.

Logging old growth forests will not only effect local habitats, wildlife and visitors but everyone on the planet will feel those effects. Temperatures will rise, places will burn, natural disasters will get worse. Those trees store incredible amounts of carbon, without them the carbon levels will become even more uncontrollable.

Cant we look for alternatives? Why do we keep trying to attack these places that we know for a fact are imperative to global survival?

As humans, who have caused so much environmental damage, we have a responsibility to protect these lands and the the animals that inhabit them.
