Comments: The primary factor driving this Amendment process should be consideration of climate change and how to make the Coast Range resistant and resilient in the face of upcoming warming. The Coast Range is one of the wettest/dampest forest in the lower-48 state region. It is critical that human disturbance be minimized within those wetter, rare biozones that the Coast Range offers. Human activity, especially clear cutting that opens up the forest allowing heat and winds to penetrate the ecosystem, must be highly restricted, if not totally eliminated. There are millions of acres of other forest lands in the Pacific Northwest. The Coast Range should be managed for wildlife and forest maintenance, with that context in mind.
