Comments: Our national parks are not resources to be used for profit, they are like time capsules. They offer protection to plants and animals in a world that is rapidly destroying life. We need as pristine of places as possible to be protected so that we can continue to learn and restore, wild and natural places from the examples that the parks provide we have barely begun to scratch the surface in our understanding of all of the medicine and other value of each individual species. We have already lost so much.

If we want to make money off our national parks, we could charge a lot more for people to visit or for experiences that one can have inside the parks without damaging them at all. They are unique and special and have created foundational memories for so many, but there is so much more potential there. Strip them for scrap do not sell the trees do not mine them or steal the water.

Allow Generations to come to learn from our parks in the hopes that we will have a planet that is beautiful in the future. At the rate we are going this is not predictable.
