Comments: Every time a road is installed, be it "temporary or permanent", humans invade, and things pay the ultimate price. I would like you to reconsider leaving this area untouched by human intervention. You say that it is to help the environment. I say, someone wants the wood. Play on words don't make it so. Nature is doing just fine without our help. And that so called, "temporary road", won't be so temporary. It is far too inviting. We humans are a plague that spreads its greed into every inch of this planet. Just because you say it is to help nature, we pretty much know, it's to help some big corporations bottom line. I'm against this culling tree situation. I say no go.
