Comments: Chantry Flat is one of the most overcrowded hiking destinations in Southern California. The only good thing about the limited parking is that it places a natural cap on the number of hikers on the trails. But instead of focusing on very real problems, like the lack of restrooms or the rise in trash and graffiti, your plan is to lift that natural cap on visitors and let an unlimited amount of hikers into the canyon, without any increase in resources to deal with that influx? All this does is exacerbate the existing problems. I would love it if you could explain to me what the issue is that we think we're solving.
