Comments: The ecocide of the American continent has been devastating for the Indigenous population. After facing centuries of attack from the colonizing forces, what remains is necessary to protect for many reasons. Most importantly, we must impede the incoming climate catastrophe that will affect all of us. The loss of wildlife and the death of the ecosystem are necessary to prevent, and it's your job to do so. We must do this by doing whatever we can to protect the water, soil, plants, and wildlife from the greedy billionaire class. We must not forget that this is sacred land as well. The cultural genocide of the Indigenous people is still an ongoing process. We can't give up on the past few decades of a promising future. We just can't. The Lakota people must have their holy sites respected by the government. That is why we need an extension on the comment period to allow people to let their voices be heard.
