Comments: Imagine your church being bulldozed because of a company's desire to make money, with total disregard for your sacred experiences in that building. Imagine the land your ancestors worked so you could be who and where you are today, still there, still available to you and your own grandchildren. The Pesla not only provides spiritual enlightenment but fertile land for animals that we raise for food, that feeds and nourishes any and all people. I have been attending ceremony on the Pesla for nearly 20 years. I have seen lives positively transformed because the land was available and reserved for sacred cultural practices. The land has brought together all walks of life and I have met ranchers, Cowboys, Indians, and many tourists who have testified to the power of the Pesla and the need to preserve it, for the sake of all generations to come and also to honor the generations of the past who worked hard to maintain its beauty and power. There are many other efficient and profitable ways to source energy instead of drilling and the tribes, ranchers and local people want to work together to make it so.
