Comments: We stand at a time when excessive damage to the environment is unacceptable. Moreover, wanting to do it in a sacred site proves that this isn't just about getting supplies and economics, it's about a continued agenda to disrespect and disenfranchise indigenous communities. Humanity could face extinction within the century, and we are at a tipping point where the degradation of the worlds ecosystems is going to spill over into full-blown ecological collapse and a climate catastrophe. The typical western male seems to view nature as a thing to be dominated, and the egomaniacs who have the economic power to make mining projects like this happen epitomize that, but as our world dies, they will realize the natural world is what keeps us alive. Their actions against it are a terroristic threat to the wellbeing of every living human, and all future generations, fueled only by their own spite and greed.
