Comments: To whom it may concern,

In our repugnant political era where we are not concerned with treaty agreements, the sanctity of animal habitat or clean water it is crucial to remind PeteLien and Sons that this proposed mining project is a bastardization of progress, and an equivocation of industry. We stand at a turning point of American history where we have all been asked simply to do the right thing. Mining on sacred Lakota land is not that. The trump administration is hell bent on rolling back endangered policy protections that are applied globally all so that companies like this can destroy and make extinct animals, plants and fungi. This would be inconsequential to the likes of land grabbers until you realize that our pharmaceutical companies are only as successful as our forests. The polysaccharide compounds, medicinals, and industrially viable pigments found on this land will always be more financially lucrative than measly minerals. Open your eyes and say no to illegal mining on sacred land.
