Comments: As a member of the skiing community and a resident of the Rockies (northern Utah) as well as an appreciator of national forests everywhere, I do not see the harm in expansion in this case. I am an environmental scientist and I would love to see ski resort expansion because it causes more people to donate to and appreciate the environment. Ski resorts like Targhee are committed to sustainable development and going carbon neutral. Much national forest land goes under appreciated and underexplored but resort development can be appreciated in summer and winter. There will be countless acres left of national forest land to be preserved. I'm in favor of both terrain expansions into the bowl and the woods. As long as the land is developed for skiing and restaurants, not hotels or housing, I support it. Also as long as Targhee maintains their sustainability goals
