Comments: I recently moved back to the Valley after a long absence. And what a difference a few decades have made! Obviously, opportunity and diversity have increased. But so has the cost of living, infrastructure expansion and deterioration, pressure on resources, school crowding, traffic problems, etc.

When will enough be enough? What about a sensible plan for thoughtful growth that emphasizes quality of life over maximizing growth and profits?

I know that the little town that I moved away from is gone, never to return. But can't we put the brakes on helter-skelter expansion that will benefit few but impact all?
