Comments: I have vacationed many times in various areas of Utah. However I have not been to Mount Timpanogos Wilderness area but feel the need to comment. My preferred choice is the "No Action Alternative." Let me explain why:

I lived 25 years in Huntington Beach, California, the site of literally hundreds of oil wells. The first oil well rig in Huntington Beach has been left in place---dilapidated though it is. It is a reminder of Huntington Beach's history.

Leaving the quonset hut in place would also serve the same purpose, without compromising the area's wilderness character. Please do not attempt to rebuild the structure. The cement mixers, jackhammers and other motorized equipment used to "repair" the quonset hut would be self-defeating because of the harm they would inflict upon the wilderness area. Leaving the quonset hut as is, while letting Mother Nature work her will upon the structure would tell a better story than trying to fix the hut.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment.
