Comments: First off, when adopt a highway was a program I adopted a 5 mile stretch up American Fork Canyon. So I feel I have invested in the canyon itself. Secondly, if rangers and emergency services think there is a need for an emergency shelter up at Emerald Lake, there is no reason not to build it. People use that trail, a lot! Experienced hikers and novice hikers use it. Anyone could get caught in a freak storm up there and need it. So the question is, do we as a society care about protecting human life or not?
