Comments: I've lived in eastern Washington all of my life. The forest has always been shared with cattle and sheep. The Range area highway signs are as old as me. The sheep your talking about are not bighorn sheep. They are a foreign invasive species introduced by the game department. The turkeys are also an invasive species that have driven out the native species. Beef,sheep and deer ignore each other. I've watched it for years in places like lake Wenatchee and Okanagan County. The Caucasus rams or whatever they are need to be exterminated before our native mountain goats are gone. I can't believe that the government protects something as prolific as cougars and wolves but watches rare species like mountain goats to get exterminated. If you're worried about native species get rid of the rams and turkeys.
