

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 8/31/2025 12:07:01 AM

First name: Craig

Last name: Fierke

Organization:

Title:

Comments: Regarding wild sheep vs domestic sheep and cattle on state and federal and us forest service lands and the like. Born and raised in Washington and growing up hunting and fishing throughout this state and others I finally made it to age 77. Some of the worst times spent in the woods has been seeing the natural environment destroyed by fire and to be reborn again and again in most cases unpreventable. The destruction of the habitat by human intervention with domestic livestock is 100% totally avoidable with regards to the wildlife of "all" species. Many times going into a natural undisturbed area hunting and witnessing game in great abundance and then most of it disappearing within the first or second year after domestic encroachment. You "money mongers" know who you are and don't give a damn about future generations! Some of you have died already leaving others to follow in your footsteps. Cattle and sheep eat everything to the bare ground and nothing left. Here's a message to the general public; Do you know cattle and sheep are let onto so called "wilderness" designated areas. These areas are supposed to be free of commercial use for monetary gain. Wilderness's are supposed to be preserved for the natural environment only to be controlled by Mother Nature and not the destruction of the hand by mankind. I rode horseback into a so called wilderness area in Oregon a few years back only to find cattle had mowed down almost every inch of grass in every meadow in the entire basin. The outfitter said I might see a half dozen. B S ! More than 60 head I counted in different areas, Wilderness my foot !!? This has been taking place in Washington also and most people don't know about it.! Want to talk about wolves and grizzly bears, ? Lets go !